

"Direct" from Moscow: President Clinton holds Lisa Matthews' son as she accepts her recent AAFSW Outstanding Volunteerism award.

This Thanksgiving, take a closer look at the people we call "Pilgrims": there is much to be thankful for as we consider these early "Foreign Service officers" and their families.

William Bradford wrote in 1608, "Being thus constrained to leave their native soil and country, their lands and livings, and all their friends and familiar acquaintance, it was much; and thought marvelous by many. But to go into a country they knew not but by hearsay, where they must learn a new language and get their livings they knew not how, it being a dear place and subject to the miseries of war, it was by many thought an adventure almost desperate; a case intolerable and a misery worse than death." Sound familiar?

We see the indispensable Foreign Service National in the descriptions of Samoset, an Algonkian Sagamore from Maine: “He became profitable to them in acquainting them with many things concerning the state of the country in the east parts where he lived... as also of the people here, of their names, number and strength, of their situation and distance from this place, and who was chief amongst them." (Which agency hired him??)

We find - self-appointed, perhaps - diplomats who gave "long orations" and negotiated treaties. An unofficial Commerce Department promoted the beaver-skin trade. Agriculture approved the appropriation of Indian corn. Long discussions ensued about which post to choose, babies were born at sea, and complaints emerged regarding available schooling.

There are great differences, however, which can inspire us to lay aside the rational discontent which keeps us working for change, in order to count our comparative blessings. Here are some items to appreciate this Thanksgiving:

1. Religious freedom. The reason the Pilgrims decided to emigrate was because they “were hunted and persecuted on every side...For some were

Reader Objects to FSI Training Payment Proposal

Dear AAFSW News:

The FSI proposal to charge spouse participants' agencies for training a OBC is an old idea rearing its ugly head again. When this emerged in the 1980's, our OBC staff was able to stop it. Several training directors of other agencies admitted that spouse training would be last on their list of priorities and that they were unlikely to fund it.

Allowing only some members of the Foreign Service community to be prepared for overseas living will create problems at posts abroad. When only one part of the community has access to information, all suffer. Ask the hostage family members about their fight to get information that we as AAFSW volunteers included in the AAFSW RAF workshop (which OBC later incorporated into its schedule).

Charging spouses' agencies is a dangerous step backward. Will the next stop be to charge for post information and other courses at OBC?

FSI can add a small administrative charge for the training of all agencies' employees which will cover the OBC costs. By doing that, the fragmentation and demoralization of our community can be avoided.

People who make up budgets often have not served in embassies or consulates and are more interested in neat

My Turn

Curtains, Cooks and Careers: Accepting our Diversity

A jabot is:

- A) a character from the Star Wars movies
- B) a member of a vanishing ethnic group from the Himalayan mountains
- C) a colloquial word for a person who talks too much
- D) a kind of curtain

Be careful of your answer. This simple test may be very revealing!

If your answer was A), you are not as young as you think - the first of those films is almost 20 years old!

If you answered B), you have been in the Foreign Service too long - but have obviously never served in Asia.

If you chose C), did you know that the word "gullible" is not in the dictionary??

If you answered D), you are probably a Martha Stewart Living fan. This is supposed to be the correct answer, but I have my doubts. My handy-dandy dictionary (it was new in the fifth grade - and even had a cover once!) indicates that this word comes from the French word for bird's crop, which is not to say that curtains are for the birds! (Although that might be the official Foreign Service position, considering the efforts some families must make to try to convince officials that it is necessary to have some kind of protection from the eager watchman's gaze - if he is awake, but that is another matter entirely). The long and the short of it (and, from what I understand, a jabot is very short indeed) is that homemaking has become a competitive sport.

There are now more ways to drape your windows than you could possibly have panes. Stranger still, people actually talk about them at social events. An astounding number of new books end with a recipe section, as though every reader must surely be a budding chef with access to fresh lemon grass, yellow pear tomatoes and giant pumpkins. (Please, don't tell me that I can "easily" grow my own!)

It is no longer enough to just safely give birth to your children and try to make sure that they do not eat too many electrical cords before they are old enough to want curly hair. There is now a "Comfy Keyboard" so that you can introduce your child to computers before she is two - and Washington parents, at least, are fighting to enroll their 18-month-olds in the "right" schools for fear that they will miss the train and end up, well, sewing jabots for faster-track homemakers.

The positive aspect to competitive housekeeping is that it is now considered acceptable to be "into" your home and family - preferably if your children are snacking on sun-dried tomatoes, and you are busy refinishing your own 16th century antiques!

In the past, the Foreign Service only allowed married women to be "Super-Wives". Now there is a tremendous diversity amongst Foreign Service family members: they may focus on career, business, family, homemaking, volunteer work, hobbies or anything else under the sun. Instead of resenting this diversity, and belittling those unlike ourselves who "selfishly" focus on their own work and refuse to volunteer or "foolishly" concentrate on assisting their husbands or wives without a salary, why not appreciate the uniqueness of each person and set of circumstances?

Why is the respect given to a person who has spent a lifetime working for a salary different than the respect given to someone who has made great efforts without ever receiving a paycheck? Why is one considered competent and the other noble? Martha Stewart is paid large sums of money for demonstrating how to make pies and plan parties. Why is she esteemed above the senior Foreign Service spouse who does the same thing without a team of designers and researchers?

Perhaps we can be the leaders in promoting a world where you are NOT what you earn (Is Madonna more important to the world than Mother Teresa?) - and where every effort at excellence is admired, whether it is an exquisite pastry, an ingenious business proposal or a loving household which is not quite chaotic in spite of four moves, three lost boxes, two children and one wet dog.

—Jan Fischer Bachman

Completing a Circle

Dear Friends in AAFSW,

As a long-time AAFSW member, I am happy to have the opportunity to serve the Foreign Service community in my new capacity as Employment Program Coordinator with the Family Liaison Office. I am stepping into a long tradition of advocacy for family member employment and career planning at a time of some uncertainty in the Foreign Affairs agencies. As always, skilled family members have much to offer toward fulfilling the mission of the Department both at home and abroad.

Working at FLO completes a circle for me. As a Foreign Service spouse of 28 years, I served as the CLO Coordinator in Brazil, program assistant and trainer at the Overseas Briefing Center, and teacher, trainer and volunteer abroad. My husband and I just returned from three years in Athens where he served as Public Affairs Officer with USIA. We have two grown children living in Texas. I have first-hand experience in life on the move with all its unique frustrations and opportunities.

I look forward to an active liaison with AAFSW as new employment initiatives are developed and existing programs are strengthened. Watch for noontime networking lunches to resume soon. If you have suggestions for discussion topics, please call me at the Family Liaison Office, 202-647-1076.

Pilgrim Story Highlights Modern Blessings

taken and clapped up in prison, others had their houses beset and watched night and day, and hardly escaped their hands..." - all because of their religious practices and beliefs. This very persecution helped establish the importance the U.S. places on religious freedom. Take time to give thanks!

2. Diplomatic Immunity. On the Pilgrims' first journey, to Leyden in the Netherlands, some of the women were captured by the authorities, while trying to reach their husbands aboard ship. Bradford describes their plight: "...they were hurried from one place to another and from one justice to another, till in the end they knew not what to do with them; for to imprison so many women and innocent children for no other cause (many of them) but that they must go with their husbands, seemed to be unreasonable and all would cry out of them. And to send them home again was as difficult; for they alleged, as the truth was, they had no homes to go to, for they had either sold or otherwise disposed of their houses and livings." The families were eventually released, "for all were wearied and tired with them." We normally could not be arrested for attempting to follow our spouses!

3. Family: Some complete families were amongst the Pilgrims, but in other cases the wife, some or all of the children stayed behind. These families were not reunited for years - or ever, in some cases. We may not always travel at the same time, and sometimes our spouses must take temporary duty assignments away from us, but mostly we can be together - or at least visit a time or two each year.

4. Air travel. It is terrifying for some of us, and inconvenient for others, but most pilots do not happily report at the end of a flight, "There died but one of the passengers." The Mayflower took 63 days to cross the Atlantic. Even those who remember reaching assignments by boat have probably never suffered such a long, uncomfortable journey.

5. Paid travel. The Pilgrims found themselves short of cash and ended up having to sell their provisions - including about 4,000 pounds of butter! - in order to pay their passage. In a joint letter, they described the results: "We are in such a strait at present, as we are forced to sell away £60 worth of our provisions to clear the haven, and withal to put ourselves upon great extremities, scarce having any butter, no oil, not a sole to mend a shoe, nor every man a sword to his side, wanting many muskets, much armour, etc." This was part of the reason so many of them died during their first winter in Plymouth. Hurrah for travel orders!

6. CLOs and sponsors. Here Bradford speaks: "Being thus passed the vast ocean, and a sea of troubles before in their preparation...they had now no friends to welcome them nor inns to entertain or refresh their weatherbeaten bodies; no houses or much less towns to repair to, to seek for succour." They had to build their own homes and beds before they could leave the Mayflower, even though land was finally in sight. Thank goodness for temporary housing and welcome kits!

7. Health. Only five of the 18 wives who made that famous journey survived the first winter. Four entire families were extinguished.

In spite of these tragedies, the Pilgrims had a three-day feast after their first harvest, with over 90 of their Indian allies. They were still to suffer much hunger, disease and deprivation, but for a brief period, they left aside pessimistic thoughts of the present and future.

Happy Thanksgiving, modern-day pilgrims!

categories than in the ability of families to be effective members of our Foreign Service community. I think AAFSW should fight hard to prevent this fragmentation of our community. Otherwise, we will be fighting again to have any spouse training, as we did in the '60's, '70's and '80's. If FSI wins this battle, then the OBC should put as much RAF information into the SOS seminar as possible.

Why does AAFSW no longer have a liaison committee with FSI?

Support Group Returns

Were you recently divorced? Are you going through another kind of difficult adjustment? Anyone who is going through a period of change will welcome the return of the "Women in Transition" group.

In the past, the group served as a support for people with specific needs, particularly for those who had gone through a divorce. Members sponsored special speakers on topics ranging from managing teenagers to finances, as well as other activities.

For more information, or to contribute your ideas and assistance, please call Nancy Longmyer, 703-532-4694, preferably in the morning.

AAFSW Oral History Collection

Thanksgiving is a good time to think about the annual Oral History Tea, held Sept. 26. It was a celebration of over 70 years of Foreign Service life, a time for rejoicing in spite of the many obstacles family members have faced. For the next few months, we will take a look at some events from the lives of those whose transcripts were presented at the tea. Many thanks to Pam Stratton for helping to select the material for this month's column, and to Esther Snow, who kindly sent me a copy of her notes from the tea.

Ruth Clement married J. Max Bond in 1931 in Louisville, Kentucky, her birthplace. Thirteen years later, the couple entered the Foreign Service, serving with AID in Haiti, Liberia, Afghanistan, Tunisia, Sierra Leone, Malawi and Washington, D.C. from 1944 to 1966. In each one of these places, Ruth Clement Bond worked to organize women.

At the Tea, she vividly described one of the most touching moments in her life. Afghan peasant women walked down from the mountains each day, past her house. One day, all of the women stopped and, without a word, one of them presented her with a basket of produce.

Ruth Bond's quilt work appeared in an exhibition at the American Craft Museum in New York City from Oct. 20, 1994 to Feb. 26, 1995. She describes some of her quilting experiences in the following excerpt from her transcription.

"When my husband was called back to head a mission the Government was sending to the Tennessee Valley Authority, I found there was no college down there that I could attend to continue working on my Ph.D., so instead I set about organizing the women whose husbands were working on the TVA dam and who, for really the first time, were getting a lot of cash. They were buying pianos with cash, and they couldn't get them into their cottages! These country women were buying things they didn't need, yet weren't fixing up their houses.

"I decided to start a program called 'home beautification'. We got donations from the cook in the dormitories, such as sacks he didn't need, which we dyed. We'd have one TVA room in each cottage, and the women made curtains for it, wove some beautiful rugs, made new quilt patterns — our first quilt we called 'Black Power'. That was a pun, of course, TVA being about power. The first quilt showed a bolt of lightning signifying power, held in the hand of a black worker. I gave the quilters the material cutouts and selected the colors. I never learned to quilt, but I made and cut the patterns and made the designs for them.

"Some people say this [was the origin of the term 'black power']. The only thing I was trying to say was that things were opening up for the blacks in the South. The first student interns in the Authority came from many of the black colleges like Fisk and Tennessee State."

As accusations of racism flood the so-called "post-O.J. Simpson" public arena, it is refreshing to consider the example of Ruth Clement Bond, who also served as student advisor for the African American Institute and helped revitalize the African-American Women's Association in Washington, D.C.

Ruth Bond receives a copy of her interview transcript from the Oral History Collection Director, Jewell Fenzi, while Butler Franklin looks on with smiling approval.

Project Seeks New Writer

The AAFSW Oral History Collection and the AAFSW News would like to find a new writer/editor for the monthly Oral History column on a voluntary basis.

The job entails selecting appropriate material, with the help of the Collection Manager; contacting the relevant people for their approval; and producing the column in time to meet monthly deadlines.

This is a fascinating task for someone who likes to write and wishes to keep attention focused on the amazing tales of Foreign Service spouses.

PROGRAM

Walter S. Symonds: A Personal Encounter with Saudi Arabia and its People

Saudi Arabia has in its almost 75 years of independence emerged from a primitive desert kingdom to be a major factor in Middle Eastern and world affairs. This is due primarily to its location and resources, and its control of Mecca — the focal religious center for some one billion faithful followers of Islam.

However, there still remains a certain "desert curtain" to keep Western peoples from having too much influence on its society, religion or government. Diplomats, foreign businessmen, technocrats, educators, et al, are restricted in their movements and activities within the country, while tourism is strongly discouraged.

Our speaker, Walter Symonds, and his wife, Mildred, proved to be the rare exceptions. They spent eleven years in Saudi Arabia from 1975 to 1986: Walter as the resident architect of a Houston firm contracted by the Saudi government for the expansion and development of the King Fahd University of Petroleum and Minerals in Dhahran, and Mildred as an English teacher at the Saudi Arabian International School where she came in contact with some one thousand students. Both were permitted to travel anywhere in the country.

These were the years of intense modernization of the country under the leadership of King Fahd and "the new Saudi generation" of young men (and a few women) with university degrees who were using and developing the new technologies necessary to maintain and advance their country into the twenty-first century.

Walter's immense respect for this "new Saudi generation" and the work accomplished during his tenure (which is still continuing) led him to write a book: Jebel Dhahran and the New Saudi Generation - A Personal Encounter. His book opens an important door to understanding the present-day people and leadership of Saudi Arabia.

Walter Symonds, who will be coming from his home in Houston to speak to us, feels it is essential for the present and future relations of our two countries to overcome some of the misconceptions that Americans have of Saudi Arabia and its people.

Many of Walter's Saudi and American friends will be with us, including a top diplomat from the Saudi Embassy, who will comment and answer questions along with Mr. Symonds, who has also agreed to autograph your copies of his book after the lecture/discussion.

Teenagers Retreat!

A weekend training workshop for teens (ages 13 and up) on transition issues and what it means to be a Foreign Service kid will be held at The Woods in Hedgesville, West Virginia on December 2-3, 1995.

Teens who attended Getaways in the past commented:

"I found out that kids who move around are more understanding, smarter and more fun than most other American kids"

"I met kids like me at the Getaway!"

To reserve a place for your teen please call Sheri Mestan Bóchantin at the Overseas Briefing Center, 703-302-7267. The cost will be $100 per teen and $90 for each additional sibling.

Reminder: Membership Renewal Necessary

Some Foreign Service family members have the mistaken idea that they are automatically members of AAFSW if they joined one year - or just by virtue of being in the Foreign Service.

Please remind your friends that they are not members of AAFSW unless they have paid their yearly (or five-yearly) membership fee.
